ZBT lectures put on new test basis

"Zeta Beta Tau can only sponsor the lecture series with the support of the students and faculty," replied Kenneth Goldstein, ZBT cultural chairman, in answer to queries from Adelbert Student Council about the re-establishment of the nationally-acclaimed lecture series.

"Since Council and the Student Congress see a need for the lecture series, ZBT will reinstitute it on a pilot basis," said Goldstein.

The lecture series began three years ago for the cultural enrichment of the members of ZBT, but rapidly expanded until it encompassed the entire student body.

Although the lecture series was praised by the Tribune, the Cleveland newspapers and the national Zeta Beta Tau, the program was discontinued last year due to poor attendance.

"At this point in the school year, it may be difficult to contract for speakers this semester, but if the pilot program does not begin this semester, it will definitely exist in the fall," added Goldstein.

LSD "dissolves the ego structure." Users feel they have the answers to all questions, but are missing one key element and "keep taking the drug to find it."

Repeated use of the drug can lead to a "blurring of intrinsic and instrumental values," he added.

Besides bad experiences with the drug, Smith said there were dangers in "positive trips."

Among these dangers were that those who use the drug feel they have found the means of ultimate knowledge, that they are wise and beautiful people who are unwilling to question or face what normal individuals do in a day to day existence.

Alpert commented on "bad trips" with LSD and said because the drug is widely used in cities people familiar with it have telephone numbers users can call so someone could help by talking to them.

Oberlin also presented media-mix show called "We Are All One." It dealt with space-time disorientation and raised questions regarding the possibilities of non-chemical consciousness expansion.

The show received different reactions. Rand said those who had used drugs found it "uproariously funny." Kopecky added that some drug users said it was the best light show they had seen while others said it didn't affect them.

Kopecky said use of strobe lights at the beginning and end of the program gave you a sort of "hypnotic feeling."

"There was loud noise outside, but the mind was quiet. Your senses became keener."

Smith was the final speaker, and said the conference was a "critical appraisal" and it was important because the drugs now in use "will soon be replaced by other substances."

"Drugs don't need champions," he said. "They need research."

Research should include estimates of how widespread drugs are used and how they effect people in everyday lives, then how to reach people in an education effort, Smith said.

He denies the existence of Black Power, saying, "With the number of whites who have such great power, why get mad at the poor blacks?" Looking to the future, he predicts only that the United States "could go either South Africa or open society." As he turned his attention directly to the audience, comprised mainly of students, he said, "You don't have power now." The hope and leadership, he admitted, must come from within the ghettos, and no leader has yet been found there.

When asked what we are to now," he retorted, "Who is we.," but went on to say that we should do all we can to avoid stereotyping each other. "If the world is going to be blown up, it's stupid to live in terms of homes and cars and TV sets. Our only security is in human relations. We have to sort of stake our lives on each other."
